Banff RCMP to test suspected ecstasy pills

RCMP in Banff are testing what is believed to be ecstasy after arresting a Calgary man in on Friday.

Officers responded to an alleged assault outside a Banff nightclub. During the investigation, they arrested and searched a 21-year-old man. They seized what is believed to be ecstasy and cocaine.

Brett Lively, 21, has been charged with two counts of trafficking.

Cpl. Chris Kosack said they would be testing the pills for paramethoxy-methamphetamine (PMMA). "We'll be sending it to the lab just to have it analyzed to ensure that ... it is ecstasy and exactly what is in it," he said.

High-speed collision kills snowboarder

A man has died after a snowboarding accident at the Castle Mountain Resort in Alberta this weekend.

The resort says the man was reportedly snowboarding at a high speed and tried to avoid others on the slope when he lost control, slid into a ditch and collided with a stump.

He died of his injuries at the resort, which is about 221 kilometres south of Calgary.

The resort says the man, who is believed to be 30, was wearing a helmet and a chest protector at the time.

Alta. spending billions on poverty: Report

► Report says poverty rate has changed little in last 5 years ► Goal is to help facilitate a provincial poverty-reduction strategy, advocates say

@METRONEWS.CA

In addition to the social costs of poverty, local advocates say a report shows the financial costs are extreme as well.

Poverty Costs, a report spearheaded by Vibrant Communities Calgary and Action to End Poverty in Alberta, shows between $7.1 billion and $9.5 billion is being spent on the external costs of poverty annually in the province, while it would have cost $1 billion to bring Albertans living in poverty to the poverty line in 2008.

Those external costs include health care, crime and lost economic opportunities.

"It makes the case very, very clearly that not only is it the morally right thing to do, it's the economically right thing to do," said VCC director Dan Meades.

Alberta is one of three provinces in Canada without a poverty-reduction strategy — something that is desperately needed, according to Joe Ceci, co-ordinator of Action to End Poverty in Alberta.

"We're hoping to turn the crank of many fiscal conservatives and others," he said, adding the numbers in the report are modest, as they don't take into account the cost of various social programs.

Ald. Gael MacLeod said the report highlights the need for collaboration throughout all levels of government.

Report findings

- The report was based largely on methodology used by other provinces.
- An estimated $1.2 billion is spent in health-care costs, according to the report.
- $560 million is attributable to crime.

"We want to be a caring society and we want to be fiscally prudent and this moves us in the direction of both at the same time."

Teacher retention a growing Alberta problem

► Province, union continue to work on new contract for educators

JEREMY NOLAIS

Students keep enrolling in record numbers, yet half of Alberta's prospective teachers will choose a profession outside of the classroom.

Increasing job responsibilities that amount to an average of 56 working hours per week and constant threats to job security are among the chief concerns, said Jonathan Tegtmeyer with the Alberta Teachers' Association.

"We are going to need these teachers.... It's going to be an increasingly important issue over the next few years," he said.

An official analysis conducted for the province last year found that 25 per cent of Alberta bachelor of education graduates will never sign on with a school board in the province. Of the remaining 75 per cent that do, one-third will quit within the first five years.

"It's called teacher burnout," offered Bobbie Keding, who is working towards an education degree at Mount Royal University and has been warned by her professors about the stresses of the job.

► Teacher retention is on the radar for both the Alberta Teachers' Association and the provincial government.

"It becomes too much with the planning, extra-curricular work and assessment. Some people can't handle it, so they switch."

Alberta Education Minister Thomas Lukaszuk noted that an education degree can open doors to a number of careers, but said retaining new teachers must remain a top priority for his ministry.

"You need a balance," he said. "You need the experience, but you also need the innovation that comes from young teachers in the system."

Keding certainly hopes to find herself in front of a group of aspiring learners in the years ahead, refusing to be deterred by the negative experiences of some of her predecessors.

"Personally, I have known I wanted to be a teacher since Grade 10, no matter what curveballs I get," she said.

Budget key battle for Wildrose

Alberta politicians return to work Tuesday, but the opposition Wildrose party says it will be Thursday's 2012-13 budget that will lay out the battleground for the upcoming election.

"This is going to be a session about who is really best able to manage the books," said Wildrose Leader Danielle Smith.

"I think it's going to give a pretty clear indication of the direction (Premier Alison) Redford's Tories are going."

Smith said that, as has happened in the last two years, the Wildrose will present an alternative spending document.

"We believe in balanced budgets. We believe in value for tax dollars. We believe in restraining year-over-year spending growth, and making sure we have a capital plan we can afford and cutting wasteful spending," she said.

Police youth program seeks cash

Twice the number of Calgary kids may receive an education through the YouthLink Calgary Police Interpretive Centre should city council assist with funding.

140,000 The YouthLink Calgary Police Interpretive Centre has educated approximately 140,000 youth.

YouthLink Calgary demonstrates the consequences of crime with interactive exhibits and programs.

The Calgary Police Service has donated a new building to the YouthLink program, and Ald. Ray Jones is asking his colleagues to contribute $2 million of the $8-million cost to renovate the space.

Jones said the expense is well worth the investment.

"If you don't spend the money in crime prevention to begin with, you're going to end up spending it at the end of the day," he said.

YouthLink is seeking $2 million each from the provincial and federal governments in addition to the request of the city.

The new space would double the Grade 6 student attendance.

"If we can get 50,000 to 100,000 kids in to see this exhibit, I think it's well worth its weight," said Jones.

Council will vote on the notice of motion today.

Arrest in 'Santa' luring case

Police in B.C. have arrested a suspect in a case where a man allegedly tried to lure a child by claiming he was Santa.

David Warren Buchanan, 67, has been charged with two counts of attempted child abduction and police say he is a suspect in a third case.

Police in Edmonton say that on Jan. 23, they responded to a call about an elderly man with a beard who allegedly approached a four-year-old girl, offered her candy and asked if she wanted to go for a ride with Santa.

Police say there were two other incidents in Edmonton — one last month and another in 2010 — where children were approached while they were with their parents.

Cyclists reliant on the many programs offered at Good Life Community Bike Shop may be left in limbo while a new location to set up shop is sought.

With the lease expiring at the current Eau Claire Market site, staff at the community bike shop are in the process of searching for a new affordable downtown location.

Jackie Mann, co-founder of Good Life, said that in three and a half years they have grown to more than 5,000 members, many of whom rely on the programs offered not only for transportation but also for a sense of belonging.

Every hour of volunteering is worth $5 towards Good Life, allowing many to work towards purchasing a recycled or refurbished bike, or any parts they may need.

"For people who are low-income, it's a critical mobility issue — how you find work, how you get to work and how you carry all your stuff," said Mann.

Volunteer Neal Wilding said through Good Life, he's learned basic bicycle maintenance and is now able to teach that to others at the shop. He said he's confident the shop will find a new home.

"For a community space, it's really, really valuable," he said.

ETHICAL DEBATE

Supreme Court to rule on HIV disclosure

Canada's highest court is set to hear arguments over whether it's a crime for people with HIV to keep their condition from their sexual partners if the risk of transmission is low.

Supreme Court justices are to hear two cases Wednesday that hinge on the obligations of those with the virus that causes AIDS.

Prosecutors argue people carrying HIV must always inform their partners regardless of the risks of transmission. That way, partners can decide if they want to run the risk of contracting the virus.

Advocates argue that such thinking criminalizes carriers of the virus and doesn't acknowledge the science that can determine the likelihood of transmission.

Baird defends Israel's Iran fear

SEAN KILPATRICK/ THE CANADIAN PRESS

► Minister of Foreign Affairs John Baird said yesterday Israel has every reason to feel threatened by Iran.

► Minister: Israel has a right to feel threatened ► Refers to Mein Kampf

Foreign Affairs Minister John Baird invoked images of the Holocaust in defending the notion of possible Israeli military action against Iran.

Appearing on CTV's Question Period Sunday, he suggested the Jewish state has every right to feel threatened and pointed to recent comments by the Islamic republic's supreme leader, who vowed to remove a "cancer" from the Middle East.

Ayatollah Ali Khamenei, in a speech broadcast across Iran on Friday, also pledged to aid any nation or group that challenges Israel.

"Obviously you can understand why the Jewish people and why Israel would take him seriously," Baird said in an interview with the news program from Israel.

Heated words

Baird's comments added to the war of words over Iran's nuclear program.

► The deputy head of Iran's elite Revolutionary Guard, Hossein Salami, also warned that any country in the Middle East whose territory is used to launch a military strike will face retaliation.

► Salami was quoted as saying Tehran will use "retaliatory aggression" against neighbours if they aid in such an attack.

"Hitler wrote Mein Kampf more than a decade before he became Chancellor of Germany. And they take these issues pretty seriously here." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Anti-Putin song strikes a chord

► Ex-Russian paratroopers write and perform catchy protest song ► Artists use the tune to build support

The most popular protest song in Moscow today comes from burly men in blue berets, unlikely heroes of a peaceful middle-class movement challenging the strongman rule of Vladimir Putin.

The simple but catchy song was performed at a protest rally for the first time this weekend, but many of the tens of thousands in the crowd already knew the words.

On a snowy square across a frozen river from the Kremlin, the protesters sang along with the chorus, which sums up their weariness with Putin as he intends to extend his 12 years in power by winning a presidential election in March:

1M

A video of the former paratroopers and three others performing the song lit up the Internet, getting more than one million views in the first few days.

"You're just like me, a man not a god. I'm just like you, a man not a sod."

The men were joined on the stage by some of Russia's most respected cultural figures who have played major roles in organizing the protests along with veteran politicians now in the opposition.

The former paratroopers' song is just one of the many musical, literary and artistic creations that have inspired and enlivened the protest movement that is still largely the reserve of erudite, urban Russians.

Mikhail Vistitsky, a 45-year-old veteran of the elite force, wrote the lyrics after attending one of the first big anti-Putin demonstrations in late December.

"Mikhail had the idea that a song, an anthem, was what the whole protest movement needed," said Stanislav Baranov, who contributed music and several lines to the song. "The lyrics came straight from his heart in half an hour."

It's a snow-go all over Europe

► State of emergency called after heavy snowfall

In Bosnia, more than 100 remote villages have been cut off by two metres of snow in the mountains. More than one metre fell in Sarajevo, the capital, where a state of emergency has been declared.

Three helicopters cruised over eastern Bosnia Sunday, delivering food and picking up people who needed evacuation. Sarajevo has been paralyzed since Friday evening and authorities have ordered all schools closed. Residents have volunteered to remove snow and ice from the trams that are stuck along the city's tracks.

"The snow is beautiful, but let's hope spring comes soon."

POPE BENEDICT XVI

In neighbouring Serbia, officials said 70,000 people remain cut off. So far, 32 municipalities throughout the country have introduced emergency measures, said senior emergency official Predrag Maric. Later Sunday, Serbia's emergency board was to meet to discuss the crisis.

In Montenegro, the north of the country remained cut off, although emergency crews have managed to clear some of the blocked roads.

The situation also had improved somewhat in Croatia, where bus traffic toward the coast resumed, even as snow slowed traffic throughout the country. In the coastal town of Split, where authorities declared emergency measures, dozens of people sought medical help for injuries sustained on ice and snow. Snow is extremely rare in Split, which is on the Adriatic coast. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

QUEEN ELIZABETH II BRAVES COLD, SNOW AHEAD OF DIAMOND JUBILEE

Queen Elizabeth II braved the cold and snow to attend church Sunday on the eve of her Diamond Jubilee anniversary.

Bundled in a brown coat and matching fur hat, Elizabeth was joined by her husband, Prince Philip, at the service at West Newton church on her Sandringham Estate in eastern England.

Following a service that lasted less than an hour, the queen took time to greet and accept flowers from well-wishers huddled in the freezing temperatures to catch a glimpse of her.

on the throne on Monday. The anniversary will be marked by a series of events throughout 2012.

Elizabeth ascended the throne when her father, George VI, died on Feb. 6, 1952. She is the longest-serving monarch after Queen Victoria, who ruled for more than 63 years.

U.S. calls for coalition to end Syrian violence

► Russia, China veto UN-backed resolution to stop the bloodshed ► Rebels say only force will oust regime

The United States proposed an international coalition to support Syria's opposition Sunday after Russia and China blocked a UN attempt to end nearly 11 months of bloodshed, raising fears that violence will escalate. Rebel soldiers said force was now the only way to oust President Bashar Assad, while the regime vowed to press its military crackdown.

The threat of both sides turning to greater force after Russia and China vetoed a UN Security Council resolution raises the potential for Syria's turmoil to move into an even more dangerous new phase that could degenerate into civil war.

The uprising, inspired by other Arab Spring revolts,

► U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton

began in March with peaceful protests against Assad's regime, sparking a fierce crackdown by government forces. Soldiers who defected to join the uprising later began to protect protesters from attacks.

U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton warned that chances for "a brutal civil war" would increase as Syrians under attack from their government move to defend themselves, unless international steps provide another way.

Speaking to reporters in the Bulgarian capital Sofia, she called the double veto at the UN Security Council on Saturday "a travesty."

"Faced with a neutered Security Council, we have to redouble our efforts outside of the United Nations," she said, calling for friends of democratic Syria to "support the Syrian people's right to have a better future."

Saudi women challenge legality of driving ban

Saudi women leading a campaign against the kingdom's ban on female driving are calling on the courts to take up their lawsuits demanding the right to drive.

Manal al-Sherif said Sunday that she and another woman activist are urging judicial authorities to begin proceedings on complaints they lodged after being refused driver's licences.

Al-Sherif says she filed her suit in November and it was transferred to the Interior Ministry.

Al-Sherif was detained for nearly two weeks last year after posting an online video of herself driving. It helped launch wider protests.

Facebook invokes hacking culture in filing for IPO

► Term 'hacking', which dates back half a century, only took on negative connotations in the 1980s ► That outlook is now changing, tech experts say

Facebook's billionaire CEO Mark Zuckerberg calls himself a hacker.

For most people, that word means something malicious — shady criminals who listen in on voice mails, or anonymous villains who cripple websites and break into email accounts.

For Facebook, though, hacker means something different. It's an ideal that permeates the company's culture. It explains the push to try new ideas — even if they fail — and to promote new products quickly — even if they're imperfect. The hacker approach has made Facebook one of the world's most valuable Internet companies.

Hackers "believe that something can always be better, and that nothing is ever complete," Zuckerberg explains. "They just have to go fix it — often in the face of people who say it's impossible or are content with the status quo."

Zuckerberg penned those words in a 479-word essay titled The Hacker Way, which he included in the document the company filed with government regulators about its plans for an initial public offering. The company is seeking $5 billion from investors in a deal that could value Facebook at as much as $100 billion.

"Symbolically, it doesn't bode well to Facebook and to potential investors," says Robert D'Ovidio, an associate professor of criminal justice at Drexel University who studies computer crime. "I think it shows maybe an immaturity on his part. He should definitely know better."

By using the word, Zuckerberg, 27, is also trying to reclaim it. To him, Steve Jobs and the founders of many of the biggest technology companies were hackers.

Retailer takes stand against Caterpillar

Mark's Work Warehouse has pulled Caterpillar boots from its London, Ont., stores after the heavy-equipment giant shut down a local locomotive plant.

The chain says it is showing support for hundreds of workers who lost their jobs at the Electro-Motive plant. The retailer announced the move on its Facebook page Saturday, a day after U.S.-based Caterpillar revealed its plans to close the plant following a labour dispute.

The company had asked its 450 employees to take a 50 per cent pay cut to help keep Electro-Motive going.

Waterloo still stands behind RIM

The markets may be hitting Research in Motion hard after its most recent restructuring, but the community considered synonymous with the BlackBerry isn't letting bad news get it down.

RIM shares fell sharply after the company's recent announcement that co-CEOs Jim Balsillie and Mike Lazaridis were stepping down from their lead positions.

The shakeup followed a bad year that included 2,000 in layoffs as RIM lost consumers to the iPhone and Android smartphones, as well as operational problems and public-relations gaffes.

That has left many wondering what RIM's seemingly cloudy future would mean for the region of Waterloo and Canada's so-called Technology Triangle, which experienced a boom after becoming the go-to place for tech companies.

Business and community leaders, however, say the mood hasn't soured in the southwestern Ontario city, because the sector has now grown beyond simply one company.

YES. IT'S TIME TO HAVE 'THE TALK'

URBAN COMPASS

DARREN KRAUSE
METRO EDMONTON

There has been no better time than now to have The Talk. No, not sex — a different kind of ecstasy.

This one kills.

We've seen the devastating effects of PMMA-tainted ecstasy — eight deaths in Alberta since last summer — and numerous other related overdoses.

Being in the news business, I see and hear this kind of thing first-hand, and having that knowledge provides an excellent entry point to conversation with my kids.

They are both precocious young lads with an interest in my job, and they like to discuss the stories they read on the Internet and hear or talk about in school.

"So, we have The Talk. I try to explain the why, the how and the here's-what-could-happen-next in a way that hits home with them. It's fear by education, but a healthy fear. A safe fear."

Far too often, that conversation revolves around drugs. It's bittersweet. On one hand, it gives me the opportunity to highlight the dangers of drug use, but, on the other, it's always come at the expense of pain and suffering for another family.

So we have The Talk. I try to explain the why, the how and the here's-what-could-happen-next in a way that hits home with them. It's fear by education, but a healthy fear. A safe fear.

There's no way of telling whether the families of the eight Alberta ecstasy victims or the countless overdoses finding their way into Alberta emergency rooms had that talk with their kids at some point in their lives.

It's not easy. I know it's not easy. Even with a natural "news angle," trying to impress upon my two sons, 11 and 8, the message "Don't do drugs" seems pious, cliché and, let's admit it, a tad bit hypocritical for many parents.

But it still needs to be done.

Aside from locking our kids in the house and preventing them from enjoying life as a young adult, what other defence do we have?

I have talks with my kids so as to be a responsible parent. At least it makes me feel responsible. I tell them to wear their helmets when biking, stay in control on the ski slopes and to put their seatbelts on. Why wouldn't talk about drugs?

I can only rely on the police to do their job of collaring drug-peddling crooks and the emergency room docs to save my kids should all of my words of wisdom go in one ear and out the other.

However, they're relying on me to do my job as a parent.

But they're also relying on you.

Students get chance to run Airdrie — for a day

NEWS WORTH SHARING

Media will always have to report on the tough stuff. But we know that Canada is full of compassionate individuals, inspiring projects and stories worth celebrating. Here's just one.

Look out, Peter Brown, someone's coming to take your place!

The City of Airdrie's Hyjinx Youth Council is putting on a Mayor for a Day Challenge. Open to students in grades 6 to 12, the challenge asks applicants to submit their idea for improving the community.

The two students — one in middle school and one in high school — who submit the best two ideas will be chosen by council to be mayors for a day (and will win an iPad 2, but that's just a bonus).

Not only will their ideas be taken seriously, as mayor, they'll get to attend official meetings and events.

So, put your thinking caps on, submit your ideas and get ready to run the city (well, for one day, anyway) Applications will be accepted until Feb. 29.

A different kind of rom-com

▶ Canadian indie director parlays web donations into rom-zom-com A Little Bit Zombie

It was in 2006 that Thunder Bay, Ont.-native Casey Walker set out to make his first feature film and won over the web with his pitch to shoot an "unromantic comedy" for a million bucks.

A lot can change in five-plus years, including the idea for your film, and how much it'll cost to make it.

Walker eventually changed gears and decided to make his debut film a "rom-zom-com" called A Little Bit Zombie, which is getting its world premiere this weekend at the Victoria Film Festival. And while he initially nicknamed the project "my million dollar movie," it ended up costing just about double that.

The journey to create his first film actually dates back at least 10 years or so, when he started working on a script for his big-screen debut with another writer.

"We quickly discovered you can't make a movie in this country unless you've made a movie," said Walker.

Years later, inspired by a student's online campaign that collected donations to pay for his tuition, Walker set up mymilliondollar.com, asking for $10 pledges to help fund his movie.

The website was a hit, made international headlines and gave Walker the push he needed to seriously pursue the film — even if the campaign didn't pay for it entirely.

"We tried to raise a million dollars, that was the goal," he said.

"But we got $85,000 online, I put in personally another $275,000 and the rest came from tax credits and the Northern Ontario Heritage Fund Corporation," based on plans to shoot the film in Sudbury, Ont.

Walker went with the zombie theme after meeting with Christopher Bond (co-creator of Evil Dead, The Musical!) and Trevor Martin, who would become the writers for A Little Bit Zombie.

Kristopher Turner (The L.A. Complex, Instant Star) stars as mild-mannered nice guy Steve, who is engaged to raging bridezilla Tina, played by Crystal Lowe (Hot Tub Time Machine, Final Destination 3, Smallville). They're spending a weekend away in a country cabin when things start getting strange, shortly after Steve gets bitten by a mosquito.

That mosquito had just finished feasting on a zombie's blood before getting to Steve.

"The (writers) told me the one-sentence idea of what happens when a guy gets bitten by a zombie mosquito: he becomes a little bit zombie," said Walker, adding that the film is a fusion of multiple genres and not aimed at one demographic.

"We went for a broad audience ... this is a movie that if you don't love zombie movies, you're going to love, and if you love zombie movies you're going to love it. There's something there for everyone," he said.

Blazing a trail in Hollywood

► Actress Pam Grier built career on portraying slew of fearless females
► Blames marginalized audiences for lack of African-American roles

Film star Pam Grier says there's still a lack of opportunities for African-American actors in Hollywood and it's partly due to marginalized audiences.

Film investors are looking to make the widest profit margins possible and build upon "brands" (such as actors or franchises) that can "keep the industry going," explains the Foxy Brown screen siren.

And if they do invest in a marginalized brand, the budget will likely be small and sometimes the target audience won't even support it, she said.

"We have conservative African-Americans who will not see certain films, will only see Tyler Perry but "It was just basically a moniker that described a black action film."

PAM GRIER, ON HER STATUS AS AN ICON OF BLAXPLOITATION FILMS

will not see Spike Lee," Grier, 62, said in an interview ahead of her appearance at the Canadian Film Centre's celebration of Black History Month in Toronto.

"I know a lot of African-American women that didn't want to see The Help because they had lived it as little girls.... It brought back horrible memories and they couldn't see it, nor will they read the book."

Grier, of course, has helped blaze a trail for

► Pam Grier

African-American women in Hollywood by portraying a slew of fearless female characters, from the voluptuous villain hunter in Foxy Brown, to the private detective in Sheba, Baby, to the vigilante in Coffy. In 1998, she was nominated for the best-acress Golden Globe for playing a fierce flight attendant in Jackie Brown — a role Quentin Tarantino wrote with Grier in mind.

Though she's often referred to as an icon of the '70s classic blaxploitation films, Grier isn't comfortable with the title.

"There were several films done before me by male actors — Fred Williamson, Jim Brown, Isaac Hayes — a lot of black, male-lead films. But when I stepped into the role, now it's 'exploitation,'" said Grier.

THE CANADIAN PRESS

Memoir

Grier runs down her life story in her 2010 memoir, Foxy: My Life in Three Acts, which she says is now being adapted for the big screen.

► The book dishes on the men she's dated — including Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, Freddie Prinze Sr. and Richard Pryor.

► These days, Grier lives on a farm in Colorado, where she lets impoverished children ride her four horses for free. She and her sister also knit hats for U.S. military soldiers and chemotherapy patients.

► Grier battled cervical cancer at age 39, which forced her to take a break from acting. It sent her on a life-long journey for alternative therapies.

Radcliffe says he'll steer clear of Butterbeers

- ▶ 22-year-old Daniel Radcliffe has already decided to give up drinking
- ▶ Says breaking point came while working on the last Harry Potter films

Now that he's done being Harry Potter, Daniel Radcliffe is coming clean about wizarding under the influence.

"I can honestly say I never drank at work on Harry Potter. I went into work still drunk, but I never drank at work. I can point to many scenes where I'm just gone. Dead behind the eyes," Radcliffe says in an interview with Heat magazine.

"I have a very addictive personality. It was a problem. People with problems like that are very adept at hiding it. It was bad. I don't want to go into details, but I drank a lot and it was daily — I mean nightly."

We're happy to hear that Radcliffe, wise young man that he is, has since sobered up — allowing us to devise Harry Potter drinking games with a clear conscience.

Our personal golden snitch: A shot of him getting queasy on a broomstick and/or slurring his way through Parseltongue.

need to," Beckham tells the Daily Mirror.

"Well, let's just say I've been told I don't need any help in that department. I think I'm pretty OK."

We did a little research — we owe you one, Internet! — and we're very enthusiastically siding with Becks on this one.

Fitness tax credit

With all the activities in which your kids are involved, money may be flying out of your wallet. Registration fees, new uniforms and equipment all add up.

However, registering your children in physical activities may save you some money this tax season. The children's fitness tax credit may allow you to claim up to $500 of the fees you spend on eligible activities. This gives you a non-refundable tax credit of up to $75 per child, which could help equip your future sports superstar.

NEWS CANADA

Colorado lawmakers delay considering tough restrictions on trans fats at schools.

► One boy from the '80s adventure flick The Goonies was openly made fun of because of his weight, and even had the nickname Chunk.

Is it OK to call a fat kid fat?

► Maybe, if it prevents obesity later, says our Mommyish writer

A new study refutes the link between childhood obesity and junk food in schools. The epidemic, it says, is rooted closer to home than we thought. And with one in three kids overweight or obese (in the U.S., at least), it can't just be blamed on a few negligent parents. Well-meaning moms and dads are part of the problem, too.

That's because, in an attempt to bolster their kids self-esteem by avoiding fat-talk, many have become too afraid to speak plainly and frankly about what is and isn't a healthy body weight.

But putting blinders on isn't going to make the problem go away — or make kids feel any better.

Dr. David Katz of the MindStream Academy in South Carolina, a health and wellness boarding school, has an opinion shared by many: "Never send your kids the message that they need to lose weight, get thinner, drop pounds, look better, etc.," he said. "If you do, they'll still develop unhealthy attitudes even if you never so much as utter the d-word. Instead, always frame your message in terms of your kids feeling better about themselves, having more energy, becoming healthier and happier. These are sustainable goals that won't damage your child's self-esteem."

As someone who was overweight as a kid (I even wrote about how I wished my parents had put me on a diet when I was young), I can attest to the fact that if my parents hadn't been afraid of hurting my feelings and talked to me honestly about weight loss, I'm fairly sure I would have been better off. Their frankness about my health would have been a lot easier to bear than the teasing of kids and the angry voices in my own head about my body.

That's the tricky part: Kids may not tell you that they feel terrible about their body because they're overweight. But the truth is that few overweight or obese kids are unaware that they're bigger than their peers.

Here's a stat worth remembering: 75 per cent of parents ignore or don't realize that their overweight kids are getting made fun of, and feel bad about themselves, according to Strong4Life, an anti-obesity organization.

I assure you, being the fat kid in class is worse than your mother telling you that fruit is a better snack choice than chips.

and hands extending and criss-crossing to share and exchange delectables on gleaming dishes.

The event was organized by The Social Feed, which partners with independent restaurants and local hotspots to offer a unique take on the dinner party. Guests shell out in advance for a fixed-price menu and indulge in food and drink while seated at a communal table with others looking to share in a meal — and, it's hoped, a little social interaction.

Events are targeted at 22- to 34-year-olds who may be seeking an affordable alternative to their usual dining experience, said co-founder Reggie Milligan.

"Somebody that doesn't need to know a lot about

Now with the concept in

A new start for 'smart'?

► What's more valuable than a good education in this day and age? ► Emotional intelligence, say certain experts

MICHAEL FREIDSON
LIFE@METRONews.ca
METRO WORLD NEWS

The world is getting dumber. Or at least it feels that way. A person can get through the day — even succeed, and thrive — with less deep thought than ever before. Overall, we simply have lower standards and, in these tough times, want escape. You know this already. You're probably zoning out right now.

But it got us wondering about our children. What will it take for them to succeed in such a world? Will they need to be "smart," we wondered, or just savvy, which is something different? Will "smart" — which was formerly measured by the number of classic books you'd read, or your proclivity for adding numbers — need to be redefined?

Kids, meet the real world

Sue Palmer, a former headteacher and author of Toxic Childhood, a book about how the modern world affects (and infects) kids to-

"The smart kid is the one who can take control of the technology rather than have the culture controlling them."

SUE PALMER,

day, has considered the question, and finds the answer in kids' relationships to technology and themselves.

"We've got to start defining 'human' before anything else," she says. "We might call a child 'smart' if they can recognize the difference between the real world and the online world. And that requires having a concept of reality, which develops in childhood and that requires interacting with real people and real things."

"The smart kid," she summarizes, "is the one who can take control of the technology rather than have the culture controlling him."

For that to happen, a child must consider himself an individual, albeit one of a larger society. That's tough when "they also follow the latest trends without looking at themselves," says Palmer. "We're social, but it's back to Socrates: 'The unexamined life is not worth living.'"

Dr. Dan Siegel agrees. His new book, The Whole-Brain Child, about fostering emotional intelligence in children, is already a bestseller in the United States. A neuropsychiatrist, he developed something called The Wheel of Awareness, a meditative tool focused around your perceptions. Although too advanced for five year olds, the tool — or one like it — could empower the next generation, he hopes.

► The kids on The Wire had no chance, stuck in a school system devoted solely to high test scores.

About that generation, Siegel feels "realistically optimistic, if people can develop 'time-in' practices on a regular basis. There was a time when people would lose their teeth when they got to middle age, but once we learned to brush our teeth on a daily basis, we learned to keep our teeth for life. In the same way, if 'time-in' or reflective practices, were adopted on a daily basis, the outcome would be very positive for people, helping them to deal with this troubled world that we've given them."

But what about, you know, books?

Emotional awareness is clearly important, and maybe the "smart" of the future. But surely school matters, too. Although Moby-Dick may have no real-world application, reading it helps you develop ideas and think creatively.

Oddly, these days, at least in the U.S., schools are mandated to focus less on thought and more on test scores, to the detriment of actual learning, as anyone who's seen The Wire season four can attest.

"Overall, the schools have been antipathetic," says Palmer, who, we remind you, is a former headteacher.

Dr. Jane Foley, the senior vice-president of the Milken Educator Awards, says the definition of "smart" is constantly changing. But all three experts agree on one thing: "I do recommend learning to read," says Palmer with a laugh. "You can get better ideas than through pictures."

When Charmaine Hammond and her husband, Chris, adopted Toby, a five-year-old retriever, they had no idea they had acquired a four-legged demolition dog with separation issues.

After their home was repeatedly ripped apart it was determined that Toby needed a job. Charmaine enrolled him in pet therapy training and it became a turning point for Toby as he began ministering love and companionship to people with mental illnesses. Toby had found his purpose.

Want to get rid of junk mail?

► Canada Post is trying to help you do that ► And they're trying to reduce mail's carbon footprint too

BEN KNIGHT
LIFE@METRONews.CA

Canada Post is greening up its act. That means the environmental footprint of all your letters and packages is being reduced. As is the carbon cost of all that junk mail.

"We travel about 80 million kilometers every year," says Anick Losier, director of media relations for Canada Post. "We're in every single community in Canada. We have three times as many postal counters as there are Tim Hortons."

For the past three years, Canada's national postal service has been working to reduce its significant greenhouse-gas emissions by 20 per cent by the end of this decade.

"We're using more environmentally friendly vehicles, and are testing a fully electric vehicle to see how it can fit in Canadian winters," Losier explains. "This is already producing some significant results, just in the past year or so. We've seen about a 5 per cent reduction in greenhouse gas emissions."

There's also a massive, nationwide overhaul of the company's infrastructure. Old, outdated facilities are being closed, and new, LEED-certified buildings are taking their place.

Paperless transactions are being encouraged, as well.

"We were the first out of the gate, ten years ago, with ePost," says Losier, referring Canada Post's online bill-payment service. "People wanted to be more green, and were seeking alternatives to paper. Now we've got 2.8 million users monthly."

But when most Canadians go to their mailboxes, most of what they receive is advertising. A significant portion is thrown out immediately — and not all of it gets recycled. How can that environmental impact be eased?

"People who do not want to have the flyers — what we call Ad Mail — can register on our website for the Consumer's Choice program," she says. "They will be on a list when the letter carrier delivers your mail, and will not receive flyers."

If you think that more than half your mail is advertising, you're correct. Canada Post delivered 5.4 billion pieces of direct-marketing ad mail in 2010 — 52.2 per cent of all letters, packages and other items they handled.

The program has been available for ten years — and remains unpopular.

"We only see about 6 per cent of Canadians registering for it," Losier notes. "It was designed to offer alternatives to Canadians. We know that they want to be more environmentally friendly."

► The New York Giants celebrate in front of New England Patriots QB Tom Brady after winning the Super Bowl in Indianapolis on Sunday night

Eli shows he's elite in Giants' Super Bowl win

- New York wins title on last-minute Bradshaw TD
- Patriots come up short in big game vs. Giants again

Take that, Brady. You too, Peyton.

Eli Manning is the big man in the NFL after one-upping Tom Brady and leading the New York Giants to a 21-17 victory over the New England Patriots in Sunday's Super Bowl — in older brother Peyton's house, at that.

Just as Manning did four years ago when the Giants ruined New England's perfect season, he guided them 88 yards to the decisive touchdown, which the Patriots didn't contest as Ahmad Bradshaw ran six yards with 57 seconds left.

Patriots coach Bill Belichick reasoned the Giants would run the clock down and kick a short field goal, so he gambled by allowing the six points.

The gamble failed.

And now Manning not only has stamped himself as the elite quarterback he claimed to be when the season began — in the same class as Brady — he's beaten the Patriots in two thrilling Super Bowls. The Giants now own the football world, and Manning owns two Super Bowl MVP awards, the same number as Brady.

"It's been a wild game, a wild season," Manning said. "This isn't about one person. It's about one team, a team coming together."

"This is such a wonderful thing, these guys carving their own history."

zone, then tumbled in untouched.

"I was yelling to him, 'Don't score, don't score,'" Manning said. "He tried to stop, but he fell into the end zone."

Brady couldn't answer in the final 57 seconds. His desperation end-zone pass on the final play fell just beyond the grasp of All-Pro tight end Rob Gronkowski.

"We were in the lead for a good part of the game. We just came up a couple of plays short," Belichick said. "You don't feel good after you lose this game."

Brady headed off with his head bowed, holding his helmet, while around him was the wild celebration by the Giants, NFL champions for the eighth — and perhaps most unlikely — time.

Today's horoscope

♈ Aries March 21-April 20

Someone you usually get along with will be a bit of a pain today, and maybe tomorrow too.

♉ Taurus April 21-May 21

If you reach for something too quickly today you may find that it slips from your grasp.

♊ Gemini May 22-June 21

You may have to sacrifice your own needs today as a partner or loved one demands that you spend more time with them.

♋ Cancer June 22-July 22

You may find that family and friends are no longer as supportive as they once were but it's no big deal so don't get excited.

♌ Leo July 23-Aug. 23

It may seem as if certain people have got it in for you but have they really or is it your mind playing tricks on you?

♍ Virgo Aug. 24-Sept. 22

It's hard not to be suspicious, especially when all the evidence suggests that a colleague is trying to get ahead at your expense.

♎ Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23

If you want someone to follow your instructions today you will have to use charm rather than coercion.

♏ Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 22

Take care that in trying to find a solution to one problem you don't
